These wrinkled hands that o'er a some a been Now folded lie in death's last soles in them. Alast how cold and still; but God Laww best; His time will choose; while we in allege ween. Who had by those dear hands been often blest. But now shall miss the love that flowed so deep. No more shall we enjoy their soft carea. Nor feel again their clinging tendersess.

In those lines where the plow of time has run,
And heaped with furrows deep the trace of years
The marks of toil, the change of shade and sun,
The record of a lengthened life appears;
Many a tale they tell of joys begun,
And hope soon ended in a dash of tears.
Those veins of blue her smnny skies unroll,
That skin so fair the whiteness of her soul.

But lo! as we read on what sight is this? A cherub form with dimpled hands and small,
Bright golden locks, and lips that tempt a him,
Like paintings seen on old cathedral wall;
Some angel sent from distant worlds of bliss,
That sunbeams bring to this dim earthly ball,
Again we look, a laughing girl is seen—
To school she skips or rossps in orchards green.

In these oddly fashioned lines next we trace
The vision of a maiden sweet and fair;
By garden gate she waits; upon her face
Rests light's rosy tinge, as if gathered there
The crimson blush of thousand mornings' grace;
Or is it that glow of bliss beyond compare, Aught else that love's warm thrill, as there she stands

stands, Holding in her own another's tender hands? Life's busy noon unfolds; and what befell

In sober age; how hands now pale and cold
In sober age; how hands now pale and cold
Were moved to kindly acts, oft strove to quell
A neighbor's grief, and wipe the gathering mold
Of death from aching brows. Sickbods can tell.
And poor their saintly deeds confess with cld.
Then rest, sweet hands, with scars of battle won,
Like folded banners when the day is done.

Highest Points of Habitat

Visitors at the Pike's Peak observatory have for years been reguled with the state-ment that "this is the highest point on the globe which is inhabited the year round." It now appears that regular meteorological ob-servations are made on the Andes, in Peru, at a height of 14,300 feet, which is about two at a height of 14,000 feet, which is about two hundred feet higher than the Pike's Peak station. In Europe there are but two sta-tions at any considerable height, these being about 10,000 and 11,000 feet respectively.—

.... Tennis Racket.

Ash is the raw material of the tennis acket. When the tree is cut down it is split into strips sixty-six inches in length. These into strips sixty-six inches in length. These are placed in a steaming box for a few hours, when they become supple enough to be bent into shape round a block. In this position they are cramped and left for twenty-four hours to cool and dry. After being taken off the block they are fastened in a way which preserves the shape, and left to season. When the manufacturing process is resumed the "center," which is of walaut, is fitted in, a slip, of wood is not up the middle of the a slip of wood is put up the middle of the handle and a piece of baywood or cedar is fixed on each side. Having been left over night to set, the handle is then shaped up. The holes are next bored in the frame, and, the whole being rounded and smoothed off, oil is rubbed in to prepare for the polishing. The gut is then strung, and this is done with great care, each strand being tightened up WANTED-Competent girl for general house-work. No washing. Apply 80 S. Lawrente until it rings like the string of a musical instrument, The racket generally used is perfectly straight in the sides, but a slight lob on the under side has been introduced by the Slazen-gers under the direction of some of the leading players. For playing downwards it is considered to have advantages in the hands of experts, giving it great driving power. The "demon" racket which has figured in the law courts has a groove running lengthwise on each side of the handle and one crosswise near the tip to enable the fingers to grip more firmly. Most handles are, however, perfectly smooth. In weight they run from thirteen to fifteen ounces, and in price the best rackets range from a guinea to twenty-five shillings, while a good, ordinary one can be bought for half a guinea to fifteen shillings. The frame of a desirable racket should be free from flaws and have a straight grain, the gut should be tightly strung and yet have a good deal of elasticity, and the finish generally should be good. When out of play, and in the winter season especially, a racket is apt to warp unless fixed in a "press," of which there are various kinds.—Pall Mall Budget.

The North Carolina Butcher's Wife. Redding Cape was known far and wide in the mountain country around Hillsborough as a butcher. No killing could pro place unless Cape was there. He was tall, powerful, red haired and cross eyed. His perennial costume was a red finnel shirt and a pair of butternut pants tucked into the tops of enormous rawhide books. His wife was nearly as tall and heavy as himself.

One spring she speerienced religion, and with some fifty others, of both sexes, went down to the branch pond for baptism. The minister was short and undersized, but he got along all right until he came to Sis Cape. They waded out into the water hand in hand until she was up to her waist, while the par-son was up to his neck and almost floating off mula, wound up with "I baptize you, Sister Cape, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost," and made an effort to duck the convert. She stood like a rock, but the pastor missed his footing and got a mouthful of Again he essayed it.

"Sister Cape, when I say the word you must let yourself fall back into the water and not resist."

But the good woman glanced over har shoulder and didn't like the looks of the poud. When the word came she stood like a telegraph pole, while the minister nearly drowned himself in his endeavors to have her properly immersed. The crowd on the bank got considerably worked up. Redding Cape was a silent witness of the contumely which his wife was bringing upon his good name. At the last failure he strode violently into the pond, plump, plump, plump. Ranging alongside the couple, he caught his wife by the neck and waist and growled out:

"Give the word when you are ready, pas-tor; she's hard fur ter throw."—Washington

It is seldom that a practical joke can be in-dulged in without bringing unplement con-sequences upon some one. Occasionally, howcent and amusing like the following nar-rated to the author of "The Falcon on the Baltic." The hero of the tale was a certain whom some one or other was always playing

One evening the barge was sailing by Sheerness, and the skipper, bappening to look at the clock, saw that it wanted a min-ute or so to 9. He remembered that at 9 o'clock a gun was always fired at Shee so, being a mischievous sort of chap, he sings out to the green hand: "Hil here, Jim, come on deck at once, and

Jim tumbled up.
"Now, blow that there fog horn for your life!" cries the skipper.
"What for?" asks Jim, looking around "Don't ask what for, but blow, you lubber!
It's the rule here. If a vessel doesn't salute Shoorness with her fog horn as she passes by they fire at her."

bring the fog born with you?"

Jim, believing it all, takes the born and blows like mad. can't hear that. They'll shoot us all if you ain't londer." So Jim was blowing away with all the wind he had, when soldenly off went the 9 o'clock gun, and Jim gave a yell, threw the fog horn on deck and rushed below to hide from the common bails.

Oh, he was a green chap, then! He's a bit smarter now, but the story of that fog horn will always follow him.—Youth's Commonion.
